PRESS RELEASE

Hygiene Group quick to praise FaST technology

Technology is helping one of the UK's leading food industry cleaners cut costs and boost productivity.

Cleaning and hygiene management provider Hygiene Group is employing FaST (Foam Scrubbing Technology) to increase operator productivity by up to 40 minutes in a three-hour cleaning period – an 18% improvement.

The FaST system is produced by cleaning equipment and chemical manufacturer Tennant, and uses pedestrian and ride-on machines.

Hygiene Group managing director Steve Bailey said: “The machines use bespoke cartridges containing a cleaning concentrate determined by the soil and surface to be cleaned, which, when combined with water, produces foam.

“And because the system uses less water and does not require continual refilling or emptying, considerable user downtime is eliminated. There are therefore significant cost and time savings to be had.”

Hygiene Group is the first UK cleaning company to use Tennant’s latest FaST detergent – 965 – which has a high surfactant content, and which has produced impressive results in trials.

A combination of Tennant floor cleaning machines and FaST-PAK™ cartridges also save water and detergent – up to 70% and 90% respectively – making the system environmentally-friendly, too.

The two-litre cartridges contain a concentrated detergent the equivalent of 200 litres of standard chemical.

Tennant UK & Ireland dealer manager Derek Peat said: “It has 98% active ingredients, compared to just 5% in the standard, non-concentrated version; and because it isn’t perfumed it’s non-tainting and doesn’t leave any residue.”

And unique to FaST Technology is a specially developed, self-collapsing foam, which remains foam long enough to clean, but which then collapses in on itself and returns to its liquid state, eliminating foam in the recovery tank.
